TIPS FROM PAST JURORS ABOUT WHAT THEY LOOK FOR IN A SUCCESSFUL SCHOOL ART SUBMISSION:

Authentic expression

- Arguably difficult to define, this viewing skill and artistic sensibility by jurors comes from years of looking at art. Does this artwork feel like it is honestly envisioned and executed? Do certain aspects appear to evolve from the student's own choices rather than from someone else's preconceived ideas? Jurors question authenticity and originality when they see several submissions from one class where all pieces look almost identical in size, color, subject, feeling, and materials.

Innovative or thoughtful use of materials

- Does the medium chosen suit the subject matter and intent? Are the materials competently used?

Strong impact

- Is the artwork memorable, and does it stand out from others? Does it convey a strong feeling by the artist, or evoke a strong reaction in the viewer? Some artworks immediately strike a chord with jurors, while other artworks slowly reveal themselves.

The elements of art and principles of design

- Is the composition and overall design well considered? Is there a focal point? Do the colors, lines, and shapes help to move our eyes around a work? Do things feel in proportion? Has texture been considered? How is a feeling of depth or space created? If the piece is three-dimensional how does it look from all sides? Does the composition suit the subject matter and intent?

The piece is physically well constructed

- Is the piece well glued and intact? Will it hold together while exhibited?

Each work is judged on its own merit

- While some jurors may recognize when artworks are likely created to meet the criteria of standard lesson plans, they generally do not allow these assumptions to factor into their selection process.
